Dear Birdsong Members,

As we have reported in previous newsletters, over the last few months our Board of Directors has been considering an increase to Birdsong's membership dues. As many of you may already know, our dues have not changed since Birdsong's founding in 1986. Adjusting membership fees is one important part of a larger effort to help us support the long-term stability of the Nature Center.

The new membership dues that we decided on affect only the first three of our membership categories: Individual Friends increases from $25/year to $30/year, Family Friends from $35/year to $45/year, and Friends of the Cardinal from $50/year to $60/year. All other category amounts remain unchanged. These new membership fees will go into effect on July 1, 2015.

Before the effective date of the increase arrives we very much encourage all of our Individual, Family, and Cardinal members to renew and extend current memberships at today's rates. For example, if your membership expires on February 1, 2016, you can renew before July 1 at today's rates and have your membership extended to February 1, 2017. The membership expiration date is printed on the label of your newsletter.

Memberships can be renewed using the form included in this newsletter, or by using the "Memberships" page on our Website: www.birdsongnaturecenter.org. Please see the article on page 5 in this newsletter about renewing online.

Gift memberships can also be purchased to be given any time this calendar year at the current rate, to be honored starting on the date of the intended gift (e.g., Christmas gifts could be "ordered" and paid for now, and delivered in December, for a year's membership starting on the December date of delivery.)

We want very much to continue maintaining this unique, beautiful place for current and future generations alike, and for Birdsong to continue being a great value to its members. We very sincerely appreciate your support – as members, donors, and volunteers – in making Birdsong the irreplaceable asset to our community that it has become. The Nature Center wouldn't be here today for all to enjoy but for your keen interest in helping to preserve this special place, and in supporting Birdsong's educational mission. We sincerely thank each of you for being the greatly appreciated member and supporter that you are, and that we hope you will continue to be for many years into the future.

Very truly yours,
Joe Peresich
Board President

"The Best Plant Sale I've Ever Been To"

I overheard two plant sale shoppers during the 2015 Birdsong Old-Timey Plant Sale. They had filled their wagon with a rose bush and a nice selection of perennials and were heading to the cashier. "This is the best plant sale I've ever been to," the man said to his companion. I did not step up and introduce myself and explain that I had thought up the whole idea of Birdsong's Plant Sale eight years ago. I did not say "Thank you, I'm glad you enjoyed your day at Birdsong and I hope you'll come back next year." Instead I said, "I agree! So well organized!" "And a great selection of plants," she said. "The workers are so friendly and helpful," he said. I stood there for a while in the tally line egging them on and collecting all their compliments in my head to convey to our invaluable plant sale workers. They loved the signs -- thank you Janeen for all those long hours photographing, writing, and printing; they admired the layout of the sale -- thank you Mike for the showy tall plant station stanchions; they were impressed by the variety and vigor of the plants -- thank you fellow gardeners and plant donors.

I worry that as the plant sale becomes old and established, many of the workers and volunteers will grow complacent and drop out, giving their time and enthusiasm to new endeavors. But even now in the eighth year the stalwart old crew still shows up and works hard. I worry that after eight years of digging up and giving plants to Birdsong the most reliable plant donors will begin to see their gardens depleted. But every year we find new gardeners who join our team and are happy to share their plants. I want to thank all the volunteers who give so much to Birdsong's plant sale -- your creative ideas, your cheerful enthusiasm, your hard work, and your extensive knowledge of plants are what make ours the best plant sale I've ever been to.

- June White
Plant Sale Chair

In a short article it is not possible to adequately thank the many people who volunteered their time toward a big event such as the Plant Sale. We could do a special edition of the newsletter just for that reason. This event is very complex to set up – we need to create an entire outdoor environment to accommodate all the beautiful plants, parking area, stations, checkout, etc., to make it as easy as possible for hundreds of people to attend. Please know that your contribution mattered - it was a great Plant Sale. Special thanks go to June Bailey White, Plant Sale Chair, for her leadership and year-round commitment; and the Old-Timey Plant Sale Committee: Betty Jinright, Eleanor Dietrich, Janeen Langley, Kathleen Reid Scott and Harriet Hawkins. Thanks to each and every volunteer and plant donor who worked not only setting up and at the sale, but throughout the year:

MEET THE GOPHER TORTOISE!

Saturday, May 9
9AM to Noon

Join Alex Kalfin, biologist and Gopher Tortoise Local Government Coordinator with the Florida Fish and Wildlife Conservation Commission, for a kids- and family-oriented program about the life and ecology of the gopher tortoise. Alex will teach us about this important species' life history, reproduction, foraging, burrows, conservation and more. Alex will bring a "treasure chest" of interesting touchable artifacts including tortoise and commensal species' skins and shells, etc.. Alex will also bring a live gopher tortoise named Scooter, so you can see a real gopher up close. We will then ride out to Birdsong's gopher tortoise neighborhood to show you what the burrows look like (we won't have a burrow scope this time) and show you some of the habitat improvements we are working on.

RESERVATIONS. PLEASE. There is no charge for the program, but please call or email by noon on Friday, May 8 to reserve your space. Class size limit: 15 people.

The Florida Fish and Wildlife Conservation Commission (FWC) is providing its resources for this program as a public service free of charge to the host and attendees. We thank the FWC for providing this educational opportunity.

BIRDSONG HISTORY: A Legacy of Two Families...The Dickey and the Komareks

Saturday, May 30
9:30AM – Noon

Birdsong Nature Center has had a long and rich history, featuring many interesting people and a legacy of excellent land use and care. Over the last three years, Betty Ashler, with assistance from Galbady Scott, has examined and sorted the archival collections of documents and photos saved by Betty and Ed Komarek, Birdsong's founders. Betty discovered many fascinating personal letters and other family writings going back to the Dickey family era, put together a detailed family tree, and made connections with many living Dickey relatives as well as doing research at numerous historical societies and facilities in the state of Georgia. She has created an excellent power point presentation about Birdsong's history from the Dickey Plantation era through the Komarek era. We hope you will join us at Birdsong for this presentation. We will also offer a tour of the house and a trip out to the Gin House Field to observe the historic terracing. If you are interested in local history, or interested in Birdsong, you will find this an intriguing and enlightening presentation.

RESERVATIONS, PLEASE. Class space is limited to fifteen people. Please call or email by Friday, May 29 at noon to reserve your space.

$4 Friends, $8 nonmembers, children half-price.

A CHORUS OF FROGS EVENING LISTENING WALK

Saturday, May 16
8:00 – 10:00PM

Join Nancy Ann Thomas for an evening field experience to practice your listening skills and learn to identify our woods and aquatic frogs by their calls. We will walk out to the Farm Pond, Big Bay Swamp, Big Bay Pond and the Frog Pond to hear the early evening chorus. We welcome anyone interested in frogs, especially those who attended Nancy's first frog program in March. It was a cool night, and the frogs were somewhat subdued. Ever since, we have been hearing loud and exuberant calling from Big Bay Swamp all the way up to the house, so we want to invite you back to enjoy a louder chorus with us.

RESERVATIONS, PLEASE. This program is geared for adults and mature children. Please call the office or email by 4pm Friday May 15th to reserve a space. $4 Friends, $8 non-members.

MUSIC TO OUR EARS: A CHORUS OF FROGS

Saturday, June 13
6:30 – 9 PM

Join us for a presentation and field experience with Nancy Ann Thomas. In addition to Nancy's love of birds and dragonflies, she has also had a long-standing interest in frogs and their calls. Nancy has created an hour-long power point presentation to teach us all about our local frog species: their life cycles, ecology, and conservation. Have you ever wondered what frogs were making those wonderful calls at night? After the presentation, Nancy will lead us out to Big Bay Swamp where we can learn to identify some of those alluring calls. You will come away equipped to identify those evocative sounds wherever you go! Dress for the weather, and wear shoes for hiking to the swamp. Bring binoculars.

RESERVATIONS, PLEASE. This program is geared for adults and mature children. Please call the office or email by 4pm Friday, June 12 to reserve a space. We have a class limit of 12.

$4 Friends, $8 non-members.

WILDLIFE MANAGEMENT NOTES

April 11, 2015

Weather It has been an unusual late winter and spring. We continued to have a lot of rain into early March, with thundershowers almost every week. It really inhibited our cool season burn plans. Then Spring, in all its green glory, happened early and suddenly. The spring flowering trees came and went quickly. The Birdsong pear tree by the Barn, which we usually get to enjoy in its full white lacy bloom for at least a week or more, flowered and was done in a matter of days, with bronze leaves coming out before the flowering was over. The dogwoods, redbuds, and jasmine appeared. Then the greening of the woods occurred. It happened very quickly and left some of us feeling quite confused. It was stunningly beautiful, the emergence of pale green leaf buds on what seemed like every hardwood tree in the forest and roadside and then the onrush of full leafing out happened in just a few days. I have the good fortune of driving to work on Meridian Road, and I really do believe that the trees I saw in the morning had leafed out noticeably by my evening drive home.

Then the temperature rose. It got very warm, again earlier than expected, bringing a sense of foreboding about the upcoming summer months. We shall see. Somehow the entire experience has made some of us feel like we missed out on spring – it all happened so fast. We are trying to enjoy each day, with the ongoing deepening of green occurring everywhere. This gets said every year, but it is always so wonderful to see each tree with its own individual shade of green that continues to deepen until the trees are fully leafed out and the colors blend together. It is also wonderful to observe that our communities are still full of big beautiful hardwood trees that contribute to our high quality of life and that of our wildlife.

Purple Martins The Purple Martins arrived on February 28th, two weeks later than last year, and a month later than the historical norm. We had been waiting, worried. For many decades, the Martins arrived in late January, sometimes on Betty Komarek's birthday, January 29th, always an occasion for celebration. (Upon their arrival, Betty used to make us go out by the pole and do the Martin Dance, an exuberant, joyful, some might say silly, welcoming display. I always enjoyed it. Who knows what the Martins thought.) After Hurricane Andrew, their arrival and departure dates became less predictable, having always been like clockwork, late January and the fourth of July. In the last several years, they have been arriving later – last year it was on the 14th of February, this year two weeks later. We are sure that they are very tuned in to weather patterns and we did have some extensive rains and cold that last couple of weeks, so they may have been biding their time so that a system could clear out in advance of the big trip. They migrate from South America, primarily Brasil.

This year, on a Saturday working outside around the office, I realized I was hearing a familiar sound. At the exact same moment, Chuck phoned to say there were Martins at the gourds. What a relief! They had arrived! There were eight birds, perching on the pole and in the top of the nearby pecan tree; they were doing big circular fly-bys; they were investigating the gourds and making their joyful presence known with their marvelous Martin racket. They settled in immediately, as if they had been here for weeks. Soon another six birds arrived, and within another five days we had a full house of twenty birds, a pair for each of our gourds.

They put on a wonderful show at the Plant Sale. It started the night before at the Preview Party. Towards the end of the evening, they began coming in from their day's foray away, spiraling down from up high with the usual calling and chortling, then circling the pole and landing, with everyone finally accounted for. The next day at the Sale, they spent all morning at the pole right next to the tallying tent, only ten feet away from our guests and customers, entertaining everyone with a lot of loud and melodious commentary.

This week they have been very interesting to watch from the nearby pump house bench. They have gotten themselves sorted out and mates and gourds have been chosen and claimed. They had been seen collecting grass from the ground nearby, so Chuck started running water into the clay road ruts right in front of the pole and letting it sink in. The females loved this, and began flying down and collecting beakfuls of wet clay mixed with grass clippings and carrying it straight back to the gourds. Mike Miller called it "adobe", very apt, as they use this to build a very solid nest. In cases where the gourd's entrance hole is angled below the fullest part of the round gourd, we can see where the female is building a kind of sill or barrier, apparently so that eggs or young will not easily roll out. This activity has gone on all week, every morning, then the Martins take off and spend the afternoon away and come back later and continue collecting clay. It is very charming to see where they have been working – there are small bird footprints and beak prints in the mud. We think they may have finished this stage of nest building, as today's "puddle" has of yet no prints in it.

We invite you to come out and enjoy watching these beautiful migratory birds as they settle well into the nesting process. They really are fun to observe and are quite unconcerned – they let us get very close to the pole. They are also extremely photogenic and tolerant of nearby humans with cameras, so bring your camera next time you visit.

Screech Owl The last time the Screech Owl was seen was on February 25th. We had been able to tell visitors "Would you like to see a Screech Owl? Let me show you where he is" and if it was a cold day, we could walk to the parking area and there he would be on his longleaf branch 30 feet up, eyes closed facing the sun, still, resembling a nearby pine cone. We knew he would eventually move on, since it was clear he did not care for roosting on too warm a day and spring was coming, and we also knew that mating season was approaching. Even though we had a number of very cold days after the last sighting, he was gone, so we assume that he had found a mate and a nesting cavity and was beginning to raise a family. We would love to know where he is, so if you notice a Screech Owl on your next trip to Birdsong, let us know. There may be babies nearby. We will be watching closely next fall when the mornings are cold for a well camouflaged little owl on a longleaf bough.

American Robins The Robin Phenomenon, thousands of Robins flying in to roost, had wound down by our last newsletter. We continued to see many Robins at Birdsong, and there was a small group that continued roosting in the neighbor's bamboo thicket. We continued to enjoy their presence around the gardens, in the bath at the Bird Window, along the trails in the grass after a rain, and in the Pecan Trees just before dark up until February 26th. They have moved north, called to their spring breeding grounds. We will look forward to seeing them again next winter and will be watching for another stream of rust-breasted birds flying in for the night.

Land Management With all the rain, we did not get an actual cool-season burn done this year. We prefer to burn the Gin House Field in winter to remove the dry grassy fuel and put down a nice layer of ash to fertilize the many grasses and herbaceous flowering plants that come up in spring and summer. Since we could not get that done this winter, we will do some experimental mowing and harrowing and possibly burning, on small sections this summer to see if we can control the winged sumac and briars that spread and take up space we'd prefer to have filled with native grasses and wildflowers. The abundant plant and animal species in the Gin House Field all play a part in a diverse and interconnected food web. During the growing season, it is alive with a variety of plants, flowering at different times and attracting pollinators all season long, and it is loaded with insects, spiders, small rodents, and birds, making it very attractive to predators. It is important for us to keep it in good shape as an early succession stage field, one of Birdsong's many interesting wildlife habitats. We didn't get to burn here the way we prefer, but it won't harm it to miss a year, and we will experiment to see if we can make some improvements by other means.

We are getting ready to burn the east wing of Birdsong in the next few days. We have had some dry weather, and the humidity is supposed to stay low enough for us to get a good burn in. We want to burn hot in some areas where sweet gum, American beautyberry and other woody brush is taking hold. It is not a bad thing to have some brushy patches in the woods, places where a turkey can nest, or a doe can drop a fawn, but along the east line we want more open areas for native groundcover plants to thrive and be part of the food web and pollination system. We are assembling an excellent burn crew and looking forward to lighting that match!

The Bird Window has been a very busy place and continues to attract some unusual birds. Up until April 3rd, we were still seeing the Yellow-breasted Chat daily, in full courtship plumage, the yellow of his chest an even deeper gold. We have also had more sightings of the Painted 6

Bunting male and Bob Dunn has gotten some excellent photos of him, which we will post on the Facebook and Twitter sites. What a stunning bird! We still have Gray Catbirds and are hoping they will stay this year and nest at Birdsong, which would be a first. Today there was a Catbird at the Window enjoying Mahonia grapes. We know it is a now-undesirable plant, but we can't bring ourselves to tear it out of the Bird Window landscape just yet. We had a few visits by a Yellow-throated Vireo. A Hermit Thrush was here regularly until recently. We still have some very colorful White-throated Sparrows, and Bob got a photo of a Song Sparrow too. The latest beautiful visitor is a brightly colored Indigo Bunting male, interested in the corn and the shower and bath. We commented last time on how very few Goldfinches, Chipping Sparrows, and Pine Siskins we had this year, compared to past years. That remains the case. We still have our six Siskins busy on the black oil sunflower seed. The Ruby-throated Hummingbird arrived on March 18, several days later than its typical March 15th arrival.

Wild Azaleas The Wild Azaleas made a wonderful showing this spring, in the woods and around the gardens. These truly are one of the most attractive spring flowering shrubs; they are intensely fragrant and provide excellent nectaring opportunities for our early butterflies. They were a colorful presence this year near the Big Bay Swamp drain and along the bank to the Listening Place.

It is a beautiful time of year. Please come out and enjoy the richness and green of late spring at Birdsong. The Chickadees and Brown-headed Nuthatches are already producing broods, the Bluebirds now have eggs in the nest, and we are beginning to see migrants coming through on the red mulberry – the Cedar Waxwings are here! The morning air is still cool and refreshing and the frogs are calling. The present moment at Birdsong is a wonderful place to be.
